KTCHNrebel cleans up with boring industry news and dry technical articles. Passion for the job, love of detail & design and always one step ahead - this is how KTCHNrebel presents itself in the look and feel of a glossy magazine.

Challenge

RATIONAL has long since ceased to be a pure equipment manufacturer for the catering trade. For many years now, the global market and technology leader has been focusing on innovative solutions for its customers. Digitalisation has also found its way into the high-quality products in the form of ConnectedCooking. Out of the desire to create an information platform for "Soul-Cooks" and thus to be even closer to the pulse of the industry, the idea of an own, high-quality and attractively designed online magazine was born. The challenge in this project lay in the new brand communication and to bring it closer to Generation Y and to attract attention. Also the conditions had to be created that the content would be available in German and English.

Solution

In order to reach an ever-growing target group of RATIONAL, (chefs) chefs of Generation Y, the company relies on a modern, stylish magazine look that is easy to consume on both the smartphone and the PC. On the basis of several personas and the customer journey, the UX design was conceived and implemented. The mobile version of the online magazine was an important factor for the target group-oriented design. In order to meet the high demands of the company and the needs of the target groups, many functions regarding editor usability and user experience were individually developed. As the subject of data protection is taken very seriously at RATIONAL, all the extensions were rigorously examined and adapted accordingly.

Benefits for RATIONAL AG

- Modern targeting of users, especially the new generation Y
- Image and brand development for later strategic merger with the parent brand
- Simple editorial processes
- Fast time-to-market
